The Growing Divergence Between the Regional and Global Performance of Brazilian Foreign Policy
Andrés Malamud

ABSTRACT
Brazilian behavior and actions after the 2008 regional economic crisis, as a signpost to global integration for developing countries, has attracted the attention of scholars and policymakers. This article analyzes the growing regional divergence between the regional and global performance of Brazil's foreign policy. The article analyzes the growing regional divergence between the regional and global performance of Brazil's foreign policy in order to assess the country's role, and the implications of the divergence. The author argues that the growing regional divergence between the regional and global performance of Brazil's foreign policy is a change in the divergence or convergence of the Brazilian foreign policy, whose success or failure in the region may depend on the success or failure of the global economy.
